C. M. WADSWORTH,

so often over the hasty fire on the eve of battle. There was the letter, sealed, directed, and never sent, for the ed, directed, and never sent, for the soldiers could not always get even a stamp. Here was a letter half written, commenced, "Dear Wife: How I want to see you." "Dear Mother: My time is nearly out." The rusty pen just as it was laid down in the half filled sheet by the gallant and loving hand which hoped so soon to finish it. Here was a scrap of patriotic poetry, and inspired lyrics carefully copied on sheets of paper tinted with red, white and blue. Here were photographs of the favorite Generals, and photographs of the favorite Generals, and photographs of the dear ones at home. Here were letters of heart breaking love, and loyalty to duty, and holy faith and cheer, written at home; and here was the Testament at home; and here was the Testament at home; and here was the Testament given by the woman he loved best: oiled and worn. For the American soldier, if he rarely read it, still he would carry his Testament as a dear MIRRORS. talisman to save him from harm. Here were those mementoes of brave, living, loving life gone out. They never came back! The mourners at home do not all know where they fell, or whether they were buried. To one unfamilar with the soldier's life, those relics might mean little. I look on them and again it seems to me the long lines of marching men file past, dust covered and warm on their way to battle. I see the roads of Virginia simmering in the white heat, lined with exhausted men lying down to sleep and to die; after the last defeat, hear the cry of the wounded, the moan of the dying; see the half filled grave, the unburied dead. All the awful reality of war comes back. So, too, do knightly days and daunt-less men. Peace walks amid the May time flowers, and already our soldiers seem almost forgotten. Days of war and deeds of valor seem like dreams WILES

Blodgett Gallery Sepulchre. He said that when you first entered the church, you would be surprised to see a party of soldiers, all equipped, with their swords by their sides, and their guns stacked within holy place, and struck one rather un-pleasantly. But he soon found out the necessity for it.

every sect is allowed to worship there; and as it is considered equally sacred both by Christians and Mohomedans, all wish a time for their mode of worship. 16m2 through their prayers and chants, and all is very quiet till about a quarter to seven, when those who have the FARMERS privilege of the next hour begin to ar-before seven, they proceed to more forcible demonstrations. They think if they can clear out these blasphemers a few minutes before the time, they have lone an equally good work.

As some of these sects use torches wax candles, staves or crooks, in their worship, they proceed to use these a weapons of offence, and a regular melewho separate the combatants by filing in between them, turning out those whose hour is up, and leaving the place in possession of the last comers. If blood is shed the church is closed for the day. Such scenes are occurring all day long, and the presence of soldiers is therefore necessary.
